

The Great Lakes Inter-Tribal
Epidemiology Center presents:

Opioid Use Disorder Law and Policy: Impacts on American Indians and Alaska Natives

- Identify Tribal laws and policies that address the opioid use disorder in their communities
- Explore legal issues related to the exchange behavioral health records between Tribes, states, and the federal government
- Study the impact of federal and state health policies, such as Medicaid work requirements, on access to substance use disorder treatment for American Indians and Alaska Natives

Aila Hoss, JD is public health attorney and an Assistant Professor at the University of Tulsa College of Law where she teaches and researches Indian law and health law. Prior to teaching, Professor Hoss practiced public health law as a staff attorney with the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention's Public Health Law Program, where she worked to improve public health through the development of legal tools and the provision of legal technical assistance to state, Tribal, local, and territorial governments.
